Good morning Mr O'Farrell,

As you may recall, my son was circumcised without my consent in August 2010.

Since then I have been trying to gain recognition of the wrongness of that situation to the politic, bureaucracy and the medical regulators.

For the record, I believe strongly that parents (or doctors) have no right to inflict permanent surgery on an infant for, as Ms Roxon has so eloquently describes it, "reasons of personal preference".

That my son was subjected to any non-medically indicated surgery, especially circumcision, without my consent, is a blatant wrongness. That it is the view of politicians, bureaucrats and the medical regulators that my consent should not have been required, that is, that the circumcision of my son was NONE OF MY BUSINESS is a disgrace.

Although my journey thus far has been spectacularly unsuccessful, I now intend to air my case in public and the media to test if my moral and ethical radar has really become so poorly calibrated.

Once again, thank you for your attention to my letters. You have generally extended to me the courtesy of a reply, which is not a courtesy that is universally extended.

As always, I would appreciate your comments.

Yours sincerely,
